I. How has parliamentary law-making practice changed during the pandemic in the state you are studying?

- Briefly describe the new practices.
- Evaluate these practices. In your opinion, do these practices empower, disempower or not change anything regarding parliamentary law-making powers and practice?

Spain was hit by the Covid-19 pandemic really very severely and not exclusively in the sense that refers to accountability. The country had already been suffering for quite a long period from governmental instability. In 2019, three legislatures followed one another. The year started with the final part of the controversial XII Legislature in spring. The short XIII Legislature that followed did not bring any governmental result and, by the end of the year, with the electoral results of November 2019, the beginning of the XIV Legislature required a coalition government of the left<sup>2</sup> (the first coalition government since the country's transition to democracy) with the perspective of stability for a four-year legislature. Pedro Sánchez was appointed president, with votes from Unidas Podemos, PNV, Más País-Compromís, Nueva Canarias, BNG and Teruel Existe – in total, 167 votes in favour and 165 votes against.

The two parties that were called to lead the country had maintained a rather reserved attitude to each other until then. Unidas Podemos was, in a way, a political evolution of the youth movement of 2011, expressing disapproval of almost every aspect of the “establishment”, considering the PSOE a part of it – but after several years of parliamentary experience, this can be considered the distant past. The main party of the coalition was the PSOE, the more than 100-year old Spanish socialist party that was emerging not unscathed from a rearrangement of the country’s party system – actually both governmental parties, on the left and the right, had resoundingly felt that rearrangement. The PSOE leader, Pedro Sánchez, had challenged for both the leadership of the party and for the presidency of the government. A coalition government of the two main parties of the left seemed feasible. The governmental agreement was announced at the end of December 2019 and the new coalition government promised loyalty but not “a rose garden” – in any event, it was facing a challenge<sup>3</sup>.

The outbreak of the pandemic, before the government had completed 100 days in office<sup>4</sup>, was an unexpected issue that would seriously challenge any government. The pandemic was a kind of baptism of fire for the new Spanish government. The fragmentation of Spanish politics and increased electoral mobility of recent years were also factors determining the limits of governmental action. The conjuncture of events was not at all favourable. However, no government could permit the country to collapse. The constitution then becomes a stable reference for times of emergency.

The declaration of a state of emergency on the 14 of March 2020<sup>5</sup> (that extended until the 21 June 2020<sup>6</sup>) made explicit the exceptional and devastating circumstances the country had to respond to and channeled the constitutional provisions for such an emergency<sup>7</sup>. Four days before that, however, the congress president<sup>8</sup>, after a meeting of the board of party spokespersons, announced the postponement of the plenary session scheduled for that week and all parliamentary activity by agreement of the bureau<sup>9</sup>. The congress president stated that the main reason for the decision was the Vox party-announcement that the party's MPs would not attend any parliamentary meeting scheduled for that week, because one of their members had tested positive for Covid-19<sup>10</sup>. The democratic legitimacy of plenary voting and adopted decisions was at stake, VOX being the third party in the congress with 52 seats<sup>11</sup>.

<sup>3</sup> In any event, minority governments are in need of additional votes in order to develop their political plan and implement their policies; continuous negotiation among parties at the national and regional levels must be carefully maintained in Spain to reach agreements backing governmental action. An example of such a political approach is the government of José Luis Rodríguez Zapatero. See Fieldz, Bonnie N. <sup>6</sup> The Royal Decree 476/2020, of March 27 extended the state of alarm declared by the RD 463/2020, of March 14, declaring the state of alarm for the management of the situation of health crisis caused by COVID-19; other 5 Royal Decrees (RD) followed until June 21, i.e. RD487/2020, RD492/2020, RD514/2020, RD537/2020 and RD555/2020. In autumn, the RD 926/2020 of October 25 declared the state of alarm for another 15 days, see Universidad de Málaga, Asesoría Jurídica, Normativa Consolidada: crisis sanitaria Covid-19 <https://www.uma.es/asesoria-juridica/noticias/normativa-consolidada-declaracion-del-estado-de-alarma-por-la-crisis-sanitaria-covid-19/>.

Two days later, on the 12 March, by agreement of the congress's board of party spokespersons, the president announced that parliamentary activity of the two following weeks would be postponed, stating, however, that parliament was not closing and was to remain operative for any urgent issue<sup>12</sup>. The congress registry limited the daily hours of personal attendance, giving priority to electronic registering. Teleworking was available for staff and a minimum service guaranteed the operability of the chamber. On the same day, the Bureau approved congress's contingency plan<sup>13</sup>. According to the Constitution (Art. 116, paragraph. 5), in the event of a state of alarm parliament should remain operative as well as the rest of the constitutional authorities, and should not interrupt its activities during the state of alarm<sup>14</sup>.

On the 18 March, Pedro Sánchez appeared before the congress plenary to inform about declaring a state of emergency according to Art. 116 of the Spanish constitution and Art. 162 of the standing orders of the congress<sup>15</sup>. On the following day, congress, by decision of its bureau, suspended the setting of deadlines affecting the initiatives in processing and this suspension was lifted by the bureau on 7 April, with effect from 13 April<sup>16</sup>.

The senate followed a more or less similar procedure from 12 March when by agreement of the bureau, the chamber authorised telematic voting for plenary sessions for senators, postponed sessions and commissions for fifteen days, suspended the setting of the statutory deadlines regarding registration of initiatives from the 13 March and reduced the daily hours of in-person registry. The next meeting of the bureau, on 17 March, confirmed these decisions and suspended in-person registry of the chamber. It also concluded that plenary sessions and commissions meetings could not be held by video conference<sup>17</sup>. The suspension of the plenary sessions was lifted on 14 April by the bureau of the senate and a plenary control session took place on the 21 April, consisting of questions and interpellations and, in the same way, two plenary sessions on the control of the government on 7 and 19 May.

In both chambers the governing bodies could hold hybrid meetings which was the practice for the entire state of alarm period. The bureau and the board of party spokespersons of the chambers regulated the operation of parliament during the state of alarm. The legal framework imposed limitations on the functioning of the congress and the senate with restrictions and recommendations to maintain health standards. Legislative activities were not suspended<sup>18</sup>.

However, regarding congress, the results of the voting procedures that prorogued the royal decrees of the state of alarm in spring of 2020, and the progressive reduction of the votes in favour of the parliamentary authorisation<sup>19</sup> indicated the influence of some prior factors, i.e., the difficulties that a minority coalition government was facing in the context of a polarized and fragmented party system. Criticism and uneasiness were expressed in the political debate, in parliamentary action, in legal action and in the mass media. Critics attacked the general governance of the Covid-19 crisis<sup>20</sup> and focused on the prolonged lock-down, restrictions on human rights, the centralism of the decision-making, the concentration of powers in the executive, the role of the local governments, the limited control of the government by the legislative<sup>21</sup> in the economic management of the pandemic, the suspension of the statutory deadlines, and objections to the declaration of the state of alarm itself.

II. Looking at formal changes and the practice of law-making in the state you are studying, has respect for the rule of law increased, decreased or not changed at all during the pandemic? Please elaborate on the question.

Both periods of the state of emergency, from March to June 2020 and from October 2020 to May 2021 and their respective legal basis were challenged by the opposition before the Constitutional Court. Vox appealed on the grounds of unconstitutionality before the Constitutional Court – governmental responsibility in such an emergency period is explicitly included in the provisions of the Art. 116.6 of the Spanish constitution. The court (TC 148/2021 of 14 July 2021 and TC 183/2021 of 27 October 2021<sup>22</sup>) after a long procedure of examination, found some measures unconstitutional and recommended annulment of certain articles.

Under this perspective, the rule of law prevailed. Regarding political practice of the period, declaring a state of emergency to respond to the devastating situation the country was facing, not only indicated a clear choice for constitutional stability, but also for strictness and rigour. Of course, this choice was, by definition, characterized by concentrating power in the executive during the emergency period – as a redeeming feature, constitutional provisions require the operation of parliament, and not just as an oversight function. The conditions under which the two chambers, the congress and the senate, operated during the state of alarm were less than ideal. However, the pandemic was a completely new challenge. Attempting to assess the optimal combination of measures for legislative operability in the context of the pandemic is in all probability like getting into quicksand.

Considering that Spain until the end of 2019 faced a quite turbulent governmental period, paradoxically, the XIV legislature seems to again confirm the abilities of a consolidated democracy. Although in the framework of a polarized party system and under abnormal circumstances, the overall legislative production of 2020 and 2021 exceeds, by far, that of 2019 (the end of the XII and the XIII Legislatures), a year in which legislative practice appears more or less paralysed. At the same time, however, the number of laws and international conventions increased: they were ratified or authorised by urgent procedures, as well as the number of royal-decree laws and omnibus laws. In emergency situations, an increase in such types of legislation is expected. In the case of Spain, nonetheless, a different trend seems to have been followed: royal-decree laws, once validated by congress, are processed as draft-bills, mostly by urgent procedure. This feature is a basic parameter in the increased legislative production during 2020 and 2021. Although this characteristic of the Spanish legislative practice needs much more in-depth examination, it could be considered as an attempt by the government to “parliamentarise” an important part of the legislative activity of the executive during the pandemic. Referring to the content in legislative production in 2020 and 2021, it can be argued that at least the part of the legislation processed by urgent procedures focused mostly, if not exclusively, on issues strictly responding to the pandemic and in a transversal way.

At the same time, the Spanish Constitution imposes the use of decrees in its provisions for a state of alarm. In this sense and given the delegation of powers to the competent authorities in their respective areas of responsibility directed by the President of the Government (RD 463/2020), emergency legislation would be produced and implemented by regulatory initiatives. Royal-decree laws and/or royal decrees and ministerial orders, as forms of the legislative and regulatory powers of the executive, are expected to be limited in cases of urgent need. Indeed, the period of the pandemic is such a case and there is an increase in the application of these forms in 2020 and 2021. However, scholars had already underlined the possible abuse of such sources of law-making<sup>23</sup> concerning the legislative practice during the period of the last economic crisis. The issue for the Spanish case is that governmental instability in the year previous to the pandemic presents an already high level of such legislative and regulatory forms. Whether this is a feature pointing to a possible crisification of Spanish politics requires a longer term examination.

On the other hand, considering the oversight function of parliament, it is obvious that in 2020 and 2021, a very significant increase took place of oral and written means of control of the government compared to that of 2019. The numbers show that the oversight function is very active during 2020 and 2021. At the same time, indirect oversight referring to the political orientation of the executive is also very active during the same period. Apart from a clear indicator of the critics and the pressure of the opposition to the government, numbers are also indicative of the functioning of the parliamentary oversight.

In any event, Art. 116 also specifies political responsibility during a state of alarm (Art. 116.6) and judicial means were employed by the opposition parties regarding the constitutionality of legislative production during the pandemic. The verdicts of the constitutional court in these cases show that the unconstitutionality issues raised by the opposition on the royal decrees declaring the state of alarm were treated by parts, and specific articles of them declared invalid on the ground of unconstitutionality. Examining the procedures and the scope of the Constitutional Court exceeds by far the limits of this brief report. Nevertheless, the fact that the legislative initiatives of the executive were judicially processed is, by itself, a clear indication of the respect for the rule of law.

Teleworking option was offered to the staff of the Congress. The suspension took place after the announcement of Vox (52 seats, 3 rd party) that their MPs would not attend any of the activities of the Parliament as one party MP found infected by Covid-19. However, the President clarified that the Congress was not closed, and it “would continue to operate for any urgent issues”; the next plenary session was announced and telematic vote was put at the disposal of MPs. On May 18, the President of the Government informed the Plenary of the Congress. The state of alarm maintained through Royal Decrees that were prorogued by the Congress until June 21 st ; the Congress also approved Royal Decree-Laws during that period. The state of alarm declared again in October 2020, RD926/2020 (25/10/2020), prorogued by the RD 956/2020 (03/11/2020) for 6 months, until May 9, 2021. However, Vox raised questions of unconstitutionality of the Royal Decrees declaring the state of alarm of both periods, of March to June 2020 and of October to May 2021. The Constitutional Court issued verdict for both cases. The TC Ruling number 148/2021, of July 14 2021 (BOE-A-2021-13032) and the TC Ruling Number 183/2021, of October 27 2021 (BOE-A-2021-19512) declared partly the invalidity of some articles on the grounds of unconstitutionality.	14/03/20
